

From: Tony Leukering
To: r-hopper@comcast.net
Subject: CORE-RIG-2Jan13
Date: Monday, January 07, 2013 2:30:16 AM

Submission S12492840

eBird Project

Created: Jan 4, 2013 - 5:48 PM

Last edited: Jan 6, 2013 - 5:52 PM

Observer:	Randi Young
------------------	-----------------------------

Date:	Jan 2, 2013
--------------	-------------

Time:	1:02:00 PM
--------------	------------

Location name:	ponderosa subdivision
-----------------------	---------------------------------------

County:	Rio Grande
----------------	------------

State/Province:	CO
------------------------	----

Country:	US
-----------------	----

Protocol:	eBird - Stationary Count
------------------	--------------------------

Effort:	1 hours 0 minutes
----------------	-------------------

Observers:	1
-------------------	---

Area covered:	- -
----------------------	-----

Distance covered:	- -
--------------------------	-----

All obs. reported?	no
---------------------------	----

Elevation:	- -
-------------------	-----

Comments:	single bird seen at backyard feeder in company of house finches
------------------	---

Observations

Select and change...

Validity: Reason: Notes:

Review complete

	Species - Alpha Tax Cat	Count	Validity	Status 	User notes
	Common Redpoll (flammea)	1	Not valid	Unreviewed	single adult female seen at backyard feeder in company of house finches

--	--	--	--	--	-----------------------------

Tony Leukering

Villas, NJ

<http://copyeditinggonebad.blogspot.com/>

<http://capemaymoths.blogspot.com/>

<http://cfobirds.blogspot.com/>

<http://aba.org/photoquiz/>

-----Original Message-----

From: Randi Young <young.randi@gmail.com>

To: greatgrayowl <greatgrayowl@aol.com>

Sent: Sun, Jan 6, 2013 10:36 pm

Subject: Common Redpoll

Hi Tony,

Thanks for your email. I completely understand the need to follow up on unusual sightings.

In this case, I saw the bird at our feeder. It was mingling with several House Finches. At first, I thought it was a sparrow that I wasn't familiar with, so I grabbed the Sibley's guide and exhausted all of the sparrow possibilities. When I caught up on my unread email, I read that there had been sightings of the Common Redpoll in the San Luis Valley. Being unfamiliar with the bird, I looked it up in Sibleys. I was surprised to be looking at a picture of my "mystery" bird!

A main feature was the black throat. Top of the head was what I would call a "bright rufous" and there was no pink hue on the breast. the bill was yellow. It had a dark eye stripe.

I've attached a photo which I found on the internet - I did not take this photo. It most closely approximates the bird I saw. The only thing I would say was different was that "my" bird was a warmer color (more like this bird: <http://www.arkive.org/common-redpoll/carduelis-flammea/image-G136021.html>).

My husband and I are keeping an eye out for the Redpoll to reappear. It was here two days in a row, but the second day I only saw it at the feeder for a few minutes. (It was after that, that I read the emails from the SLV birding list.) If we see it again, we will try to get a photo. The camera is on the table next to the window!

If you have more questions, please email. I'm not an "expert" birder, but usually do very well at noting markings for identification.

Thanks,

Randi Young

South Fork, CO