

12/13/89 (cont.)

Sapsucker was in westernmost of the two lone Scots pine on the golf course. It was quite secretive and difficult to actually see at first. This bird was a juvenile with no red on it anywhere. Suspected it is yellow-bellied sapsucker since Red-naped juvenile supposedly requires adult color by first fall.

Back from behind

dark gray to blackish
tan
white side (more evident sometimes than others)
white lower back

Bird was mostly hidden from us as working new sapsucker. Perhaps this bird will overwinter. Spent most of its time in the fork of grass. Silent, except for noise caused by claws on bark or beak pecking.

* This is the third individual sapsucker I've seen at the Cemetery since Dec 1.

12/14 Gray-browed Cemetery (near) overcast, breezy, 30°

mt. chickadee

Dark-eyed Junco

Brown Creeper

Black-capped Chickadee

Red-breasted Nuthatch

Black-billed Magpie

House Finch

Rock Dove

Crow

Shrike

Pine Siskin

* Yellow-bellied Sapsucker (1 1st winter)

* Red Crossbill (100 1st) - Section C. / 14 spp.

• Sapsucker first found in Siberian elm pecking new sap wells but then flew to westernmost Scots pine on golf course.

... at ... just on golf course ... due south of them